An Inventory of Community-led Recovery Initiatives in Canterbury

P. Bailey Peryman and Dr. Suzanne Vallance
Overview
Though there is a broad consensus that communities play a key role in disaster response and recovery, most of the existing work in this area focuses on the activities of donor agencies, formal civil defence authorities, and local/central government. Consequently, there is a paucity of research addressing the on-going actions and activities undertaken by communities and ‘emergent groups’, particularly as they develop after the immediate civil defence or ‘response’ phase is over.

In an attempt to address this gap, this inventory of community-led recovery initiatives was undertaken approximately one year after the most devastating February 2011 earthquake. It is part of on-going project at Lincoln University documenting – and seeking a better understanding of - various emergent communities’ roles in recovery, their challenges, and strategies for overcoming them. This larger project also seeks to better understand how collaborative work between informal and formal recovery efforts might be facilitated at different stages of the process.

This inventory was conducted over the December 2011 – February 2012 period and builds on Landcare Research’s Christchurch Earthquake Activity Inventory which was a similar snapshot taken in April 2011. The intention behind conducting this updated inventory is to gain a longitudinal perspective of how community-led recovery activities evolve over time.

Each entry is ordered alphabetically and contact details have been provided where possible. A series of keywords have also been assigned that describe the main attributes of each activity to assist searches within this document.

This inventory was supported by the Lincoln University Research Fund and the Royal Society Marsden Fund.

| Christchurch 'QuakeMap' | Description
A website that presents a time-lapse visualisation of the earthquake and aftershocks primarily to help those outside the affected area understand what those in Canterbury are experiencing. It plots data using Geonet on a map using the Google Maps API with the size of the circle denoting the magnitude and the colour showing the focal depth. Also led to the creation of a Japanese version.

| Healthy Christchurch             | Description | Healthy Christchurch is a network of about 200 very diverse organisations with three things in common:

- They provide services to people living in Christchurch.
- They signed the Healthy Christchurch Charter in which they agree to 'work together to promote, protect and improve the health and wellbeing of the people of Christchurch'.
- In late 2005 they agreed to focus on two priorities in the short-medium term:
  - to improve the physical activity and nutrition of people living in Christchurch, and
  - to reduce the health inequalities in Christchurch by working to improve the health status of those who are worse off.

Healthy Christchurch aims to:

- Forge a common vision for a healthy city.
- Foster healthy relationships between diverse agencies and sectors in Christchurch, from 'grassroots' groups to government agencies.
- Enable flexible, collaborative and prompt responses to emergent health issues. | Health; organised |

“The Redcliffs Information Centre was established by local residents Vicki and Peter Hyde on 26 February and is coordinated by Fletcher Stanton. Redcliffs Information Centre established itself in a small office on the corner of Main and Beachville Roads. The information centre began as a place for local residents to access information about evacuations, location of portable toilets, water supplies, and the like, and donated foodstuffs and grocery items were provided at a time where few people remained in their homes, and those who did, did not have water, telephone, or electricity. It serves a broader purpose – providing support for local residents as they returned to the area (and many have), a place for a chat in a friendly welcoming environment.”
