What is Open Access?

• Where intellectual outputs including research, scholarship, teaching resources and the public record can be made openly and freely accessible online globally

• Open access supports the principle of publically funded outputs being publically available

• Open access policies usually facilitate the reuse and repurposing of outputs using Creative Commons licences
Benefits of Open Access

- Increases the quantity of citations for outputs
- Provides clear guidelines on ownership and copyright
- Raises the visibility of outputs and reputation of the author and organisation
- Democratises and socialises outputs
- Contributes to global knowledge
Green and Gold OA

Green Open Access
Authors publish in a journal, then submit to an institutional repository, e.g. LU Research Archive or in a discipline based online collection
Link to the published version

Gold Open Access
Authors publish in OA journals via publishers websites
Publishers may charge institution, funder or author an Article Processing Charge (APC)
Varying business models

Publisher Contracts

Understand your rights as an author before signing a contract- the different types include:

- Standard copyright transfer agreement
- Copyright transfer agreement with author addendum reserving certain rights
- Licence to publish – author retains copyright and grants publisher a licence to publish
Publishers and Open Access

- Some publishers allow authors to deposit the final publication in an institutional repository.
- Others only allow deposit of an earlier version.
- Many journal policies detailed at SherpaRomeo.
- VERSIONS Toolkit (London School of Economics for authors from all disciplines)
  Very useful guidelines for authors covering versions; managing research outputs; publisher agreements; author rights...
